Be a Natural Hostess

BY LILLIAN RUSSELL.

(Copyright, 1914, by Lillian Russell.)
It must be acknowledged that for most persons it is quite difficult to be normal and natural in their bearing when making special effort to entertain. Their anxiety to please and make a favorable impression often leads to extremes which are misunderstood. Extreme attention is disconcerting and embarrassing. It is only when the hostess and guest feel themselves on an equality that both are at ease. The fawning and servile hostess disgusts and embarrasses or else amuses.

Fictitious hospitality heaped upon the humble guest is soon analyzed, and the visitor sees his hostess patronizing him as an inferior, who must be entertained for the sake of politeness. In both cases extremes are applied, and the result is diametrically opposite to the object in view.

It is impossible for the hostess to permanently deceive the guest. In showing superfluous attentions, the hostess soon appears in an unnatural position.

There is no mask that will fully disguise hospitality so consciously and studiously extended. It may be cloaked for a time, but is soon visible in its naked ugliness. The only hospitality that will stand the test is the natural greeting and the ordinary attention expected from the gracious hostess. The unnatural is too noticeable to go unmarked, and when disclosed, is worse in its ultimate effect than rudeness.

Desire to please the strangers within your gates give them the same natural, unpretentious, and unassumed attention you offer your most frequent guests. Make them feel at ease. Do not patronize. Servility disgusts; patronage hurts.

Remember: An overdose of insincere attention often brings worse results than neglect.

Lillian Russell's Answers.
F. F.: The following formula is good for pimples. Five grams of iodoform, five grams sweet almond oil, five grams of sulphur precipitate, two and one-half grams oxide of zinc, and ten drops of extract of violet. Mix these ingredients together. If there is any pus in the pimple, open it with a needle sterilized by dipping it in peroxide or boiling water. Apply a drop of peroxide to the sore, and then wipe off with sterilized gauze. Afterward, rub a little of the cream on the pimple, and, unless there is some peculiar infection, it will heal directly. Of course, a severe case of pimples on the face deserves a more extended treatment than this, but for a light case it is beneficial.

F. O. B.: I do not believe vaseline contains peroxide, and I am sure it does not bleach. The constant use of yellow vaseline on the eye lashes and brows will darken them and not act as a bleach. The plain yellow vaseline is the kind to be used.

Frank: A man's finger nails should never be pointed nor highly polished. File them to conform to the shape of the finger tips and extend slightly beyond. Keep the cuticle well loosened and smooth. If you polish them at all, polish them just slightly and use no tin. It is a mark of neatness and refinement for a man to keep his nails in good condition.

K. L.: Sores about the lips are always disagreeable to others as well as one's self. Cold sores usually come from internal troubles. As soon as a cold sore is discovered, touch it with camphor and apply a little subnitrate of bismuth. This will make it smaller if not remove it altogether. Don't irritate it or pick at it, for it may leave a deep scar.

Mrs. G. W.: Binding the bust is a dangerous thing to do. No wonder they have fallen and are soft. It will be hard to make them perfect again. Massage may help, also the cold water treatment will be beneficial. Practice deep breathing. Exercise that involves the muscles of the arms and chest will help you.

Dr. Brady's Health Talks

TREATMENT OF BURNS.

The character of first aid measures adopted in the emergency of a severe burn or scald determines, more than in most household emergencies, the final outcome. It is very easy to infect a burn with unclean dressings, and so cause an excessive formation of scar.

Right here it should be observed that there is no specific remedy or medication against scar formation in burns or scalds. There are plenty of antiseptics suggested by irresponsible persons, most of them harmless enough, some of them distinctly injurious. The only known way to obviate excessive scar formation in burns or scalds is to set the skin closed over the wound as quickly as possible. This is accomplished by nature, assisted by intelligent cleanliness, interference with foolish experiments recommended by ignorant or irresponsible individuals.

Relief of pain and safe temporary treatment is the injunction to be met, pending the arrival of a doctor. Do not attempt to smear the part with salve of any kind; salves are dirty, they contain grease, and they promote growth of germs, and a fresh burn or scald is rendered aseptic (free from germs) by the very nature of the accident. To keep it aseptic is the chief requirement. Salves have no place in the emergency treatment of burns or other wounds, that is, not in 1914 first aid.

First Aid Which Does No Harm.
The most comfortable and the most available measure for immediate treatment is the application of normal salt solution. If the burn is in a part which can be submerged in a dish of salt solution (teaspoonful table salt in each pint of boiled, lukewarm water), that is the most effective way to treat it. If not, then freshly ironed and washed sterilized cloths or pieces of sterile gauze may be applied, wet with the salt solution. The cloth or gauze should be changed frequently. A wet dressing is always soothing to pain, prevents shock and offers no harm.

Children who are severely burned or scalded should be immediately placed in a tub of quite warm normal salt solution, or plain warm water, and without trying to remove clothes until the doctor arrives. A wet dressing is always soothing to pain, prevents shock and offers no harm.

Questions and Answers.
P. W. C. writes: I am a resident of New York State. Can a chiropractor be licensed through the courts as a bill of $5 for treatments administered to my wife? The treatments made her worse.

Reply:—If the chiropractor is not registered as a physician in the office of your county clerk—and he cannot be registered simply because he is not a graduate—then he cannot collect the bill, for he is practicing medicine without a license. No illegal practice makes no difference. No illegal practitioner in New York State can legally charge for services rendered.

Mrs. F. M. inquires: Is it well to keep the head in a hot steam in the sickroom? What effect have the acids on the eyes in the air?
Reply:—Plants take carbonic acid gas from the air, utilize it for growing, and give off pure oxygen. Thus they improve the air.

Mrs. W. B. M. writes: Is there anything which can be secretly given in tobacco to cure a man of the tobacco habit?
Reply:—No.

L. P. B. writes: I work in a shop where gasoline is used in cleaning. Is it bad for the health to breathe it?
Reply:—No.

R. J. inquires: How can one find out positively whether one has malaria?
Reply:—Only by microscopic examination of a drop of the fresh blood, obtained by a needle prick of the skin. This is open to malaria other than this is open to grave doubt.

FINGER-PRINT SYSTEM NOW IN USE BY ARMY

Adjutant-General Andrews Has on File Records of 202,244 Individuals.

REPORT TO WAR DEPARTMENT

Deserters Detected When They Re-Enlist—Dead Men's Identity Established and Evidence of Theft Promptly Furnished by Marks.

WASHINGTON, D. C., November 15.—Brigadier-General George Andrews, as adjutant-general of the army, has made a report to the War Department in regard to the successful operation of the finger-print system of identification in the detection of military offenders. At present, he says, the adjutant-general's office has on file the finger-print records of 202,244 individuals who are now or had been previously enlisted in the army.

During the past fiscal year 467 cases of fraudulent enlistment of former deserters, general prisoners and others were discovered through the finger-print system. During the preceding year the number of cases of fraudulent enlistment discovered through that system was 256, and during the fiscal year 1912 the number was 237.

"has identified by means of this system dead men whose former soldiers and whose identity could not be satisfactorily established in any other way, as well as civil offenders who sought to evade arrest for their crimes by enlisting in the army under assumed names, and soldiers who left impressions of their fingers while in the act of committing some serious offense."

Examples Are Cited.

"A few examples of such cases may be of interest, and the following cases are cited: The body of a man, supposed by the police to have been that of a murdered soldier, was found in San Francisco. As it was impossible to identify the body from the descriptions of this office, the military authorities at San Francisco were directed to take finger prints of the dead man. Upon the finger prints in this office it was discovered that the man was that of a soldier supposed to be serving in the Philippine Islands. It was learned later, however, that he had deserted about six weeks before his body was found.

"A body, believed to be that of a soldier, was found near Texas City, Texas, but the medical officer who examined the body, reported that, according to the decomposition of the body following long exposure, no proper identification could be made, and that the features of the wrinkled condition of the fingers were satisfactory finger prints could be obtained.

"The medical officer ingeniously made separate gutta-percha impressions of each finger of the dead man, properly labeled the impressions and forwarded them to this office. They were arranged here in the order in which they would have appeared on the finger-print form, were classified, and the identity of the dead man was established beyond doubt.

Thief Identified.
"The commanding officer of a post on the Pacific Coast forwarded to this office a photographic copy of the impression of one finger, the impression having been made on a piece of glass by a person who broke into a building at the post. Several men were named as suspects, and it was promptly determined definitely that one of the suspects was the man whose finger-print was on the glass.

"It is undoubtedly true that the use of finger-print records and photographs has deterred criminals from attempting to enter the army for the purpose of escaping detection and arrest by the civil authorities."

The Trey O'Hearts

Romantic Tale by Louis Joseph Vance.

Copyright, 1914, by Louis Joseph Vance.

By arrangement with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, it is possible to see "The Trey O'Hearts" in pictures at the Superior Theatre. Synopsis of preceding chapters: The Trey O'Hearts is the dead sign used by Seneca Trine in the private life of his daughter Judith, through the agency of his lawyer, who is a woman of violent passions like his own. He wages against Alan Law, son of a woman of violent death, but Alan saves her life under dramatic circumstances, and so unwillingly wins her love. Thereafter Judith is attracted in turn by the old hatred, the new becomes alienated from her father through her failure to carry out his homicidal plans, and because of the aid she has extended to Alan in his fight with Rose from the vanishing of Alan through the mountains. Judith is smothering away on motorcycles, while Trine's agents pursue them in a racing car.

CHAPTER C.—ON FOOT.

Alan, he told himself shrewdly, would never have run his cycle race, and foolishly a pace without good reason: and under the circumstances good reason was synonymous solely with pursuit.

He was, therefore, on the alert, quick to see the racing automobile when it came hurtling round the bend, and in the very nick of time grasped Judith's arm and swung her bodily with him back toward the bend, amid the trees that bordered the highway of the coast.

Of necessity his motorcycle suffered. Abandoned in the middle of the road, it was struck by the buffers of the motor car that was passing. It was not nothing more ponderable than a truss of straw—landing half-way down the embankment, a hopeless tangle of shattered tubing and twisted wire.

Simultaneously with the collision he saw Jimmy, seated beside Marphat, who drove, swing a magazine gun round and let it off at hopeful random. The bullet lodged in a tree-trunk not a yard from the elbow of the coast. An instant later Judith whipped her revolver from the holster on her hip and fired in response. But her shot flew wide, and the racing car flew on as if on the wings of the wind.

At first blush the circumstance seemed surprising that the car did not stop. But then Barcus reminded himself that Marphat and Jimmy could not possibly have witnessed the accident involving Alan and Rose, who together with the wreck of their machine, remained well-cloaked by the underbrush at the bottom of the canyon. In all probability, then, the assassin had assumed that Alan had hurried on; and since their own first business was concerned exclusively with the racing car, they had likewise reasoning that they could return and deal with his unfortunate friend at their convenience after overhauling their quarry, whose life they most coveted.

As for Rose and Alan—Heaven alone knew what had happened to them. So Barcus set himself to find out whatever Providence knew without more delay. The racing car was barely out of sight when he sprang from the sheltering trees and, Judith at his heels, policed headlong over the slope to the spot where the others had vanished.

To find them he only alive but practically unscathed affected that loyal soul almost to tears.

But when congratulations had been mutually exchanged, there fell an awkward pause. The eyes of the four sought one another's ruefully, each pair quick with the unuttered but inexorable inquiry: What next?

Where next to turn?

The road was now barred to them. At any moment the racer might return. They confronted the necessity of treading afoot a wild and mountainous country of whose geography they were absolutely ignorant.

In the outcome, it was Mr. Barcus who advanced the suggestion which was adopted—though this was its reception more through lack of a better than for any actual appeal intrinsic in the proposition.

"When we broke down up there," he ventured, with a backward jerk of his thumb to indicate the road, "a canyon branched off from this one about a quarter of a mile over yonder. If it's all the same to you people, we might stroll round that way and see what its natural attractions are before we get lost."

It was a suggestion that was not only a quarter of a mile over yonder, if it's all the same to you people, we might stroll round that way and see what its natural attractions are before we get lost."

And anyway we can't be worse off than we are—and—
